Starting with the desired design specification of product purity requires that:

- Lele column configurations
- Interception of profiles of both adjacent sections

There is a need for a centralization of the design process. For industrial separation processes, there is a need for a trade-off between energy conservation and the emission reduction using computer algorithms for distillation column configurations. The potential of achieving up to 70% energy savings over simple column network designs.